

A Plagiarism Free Future

Significant parts of our school policy:

- 1 All community members will work together to develop spiritually, intellectually, physically, socially, and emotionally by aspiring to the highest possible standards of Catholic behavior, in living out the gospel values, and by fostering a Catholic culture of respect, responsibility and concern for the common good.
- 2 Students must acknowledge their source of information when using the words or ideas of any other person or group of persons for any assignment or project. Cheating on class work, quizzes, tests, assignments, and exams is also considered plagiarism. Wilful participation in any of these actions will result in a mark of ZERO with the possibility of suspension from school.
- 3 Academic Honesty is the responsibility of students to be academically honest in all aspects of their school work so that the marks they receive are a true reflection of their own achievement. Academic dishonesty, therefore, is a serious offense.

My findings

- I found out that you need to source everything you use such as words, ideas, or images. Cheating is unacceptable at all times and can lead to serious consequences.

Consequences in our school include:

- redoing the assignment/test
- redoing a section of the assignment/test
- completing an alternative assignment/test
- assigning a zero

Moreover, academic honesty is greatly appreciated in our school, so a mark a student gets is a true reflection of their personal achievements. Being dishonest in this manner can be a serious offense.

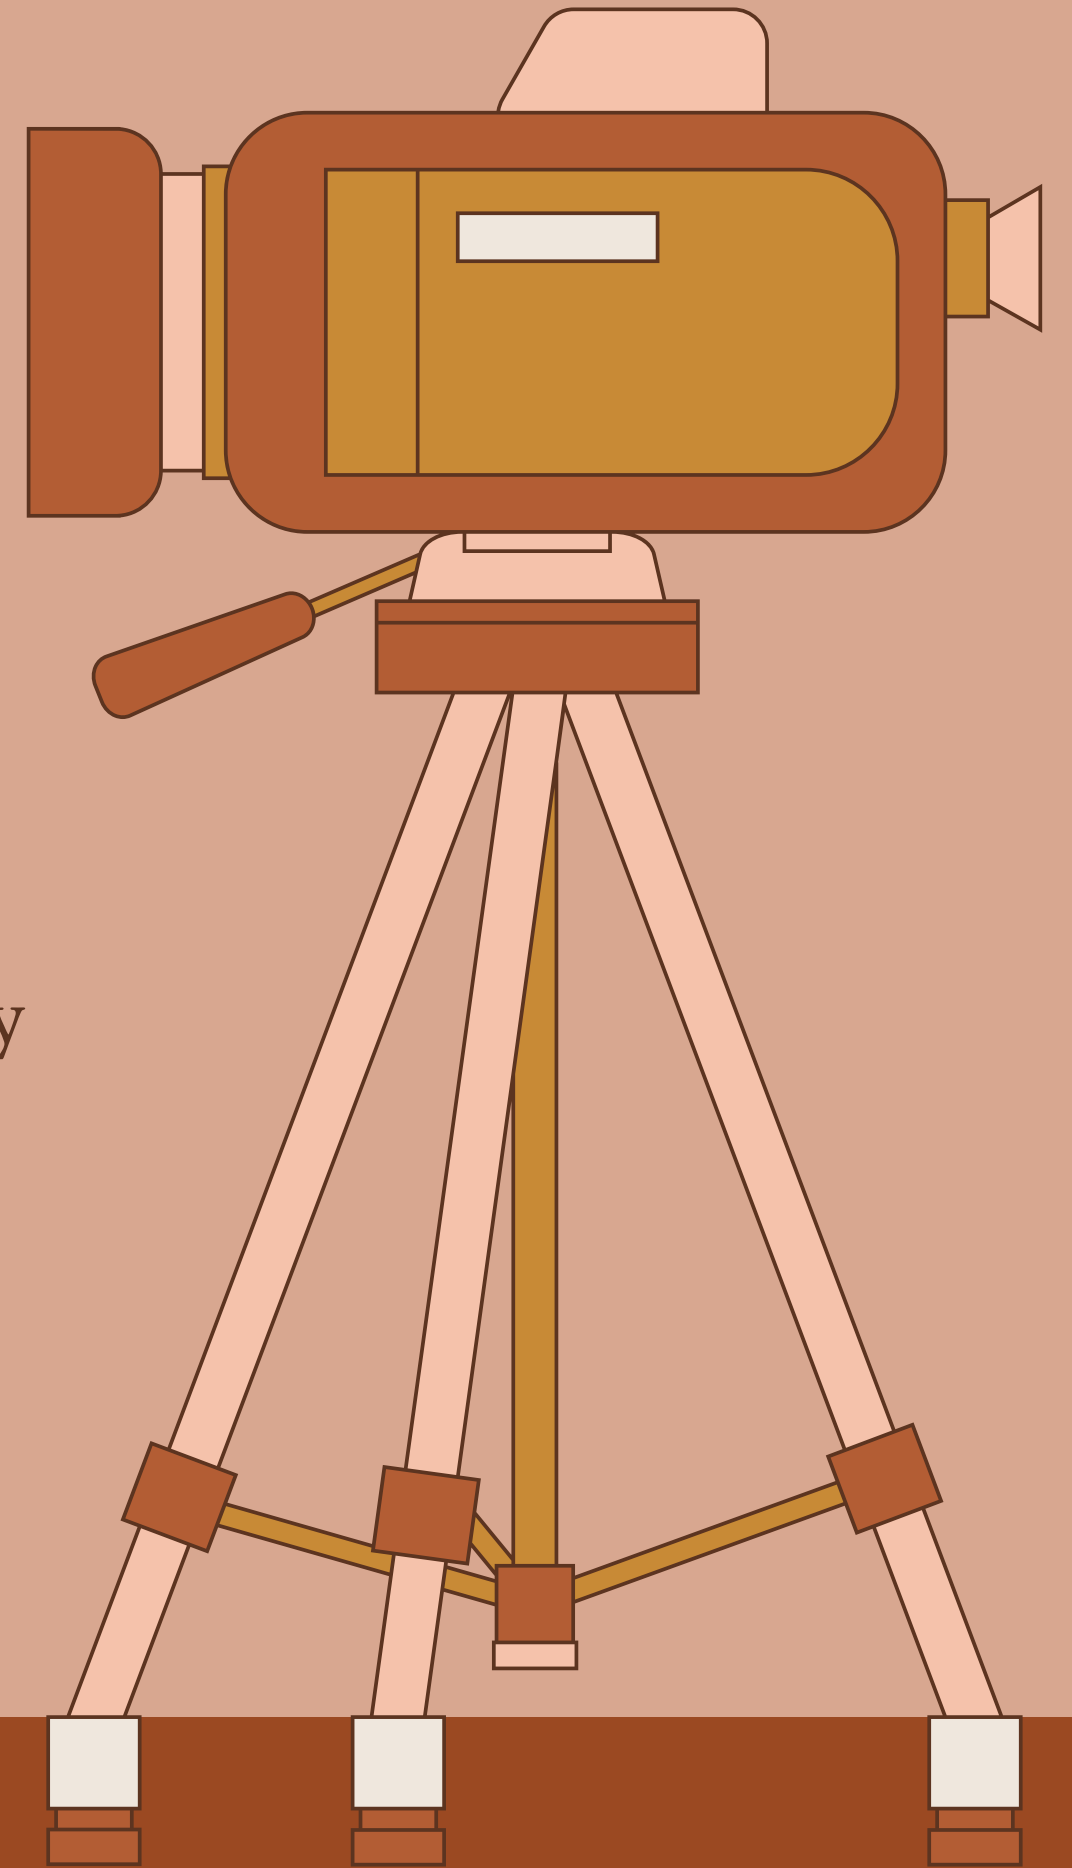

The consequences of plagiarism:

Throughout life, like in work or school plagiarism will always have several consequences. This includes punishments in an academic or legal manner depending on the severity, and where it occurred. Although, plagiarizing can ruin everything you worked for in the long term and is something you should never do throughout your school and career life.

My plans after high school:

I would like to go to a university after high school.

University of Guelph:

- Plagiarism is a common form of academic misconduct that occurs when writers use the work of others and misrepresent it as their own.
- If minor students plagiarize through a first offence, they get a zero and need to submit while major students get a zero in the course and can lose their scholarship.

And, if minor students plagiarize through a subsequent offence, they will most likely get a zero in the course, can lose the scholarship, lose their grades and could even get suspended. Major students get a zero in the course and can lose their scholarship, will most likely get suspended, although in some cases even go through expulsion or revocation of their course.

Plagiarism in the workplace-

CNN fires news editor Marie-Louise Gumuchian for plagiarism

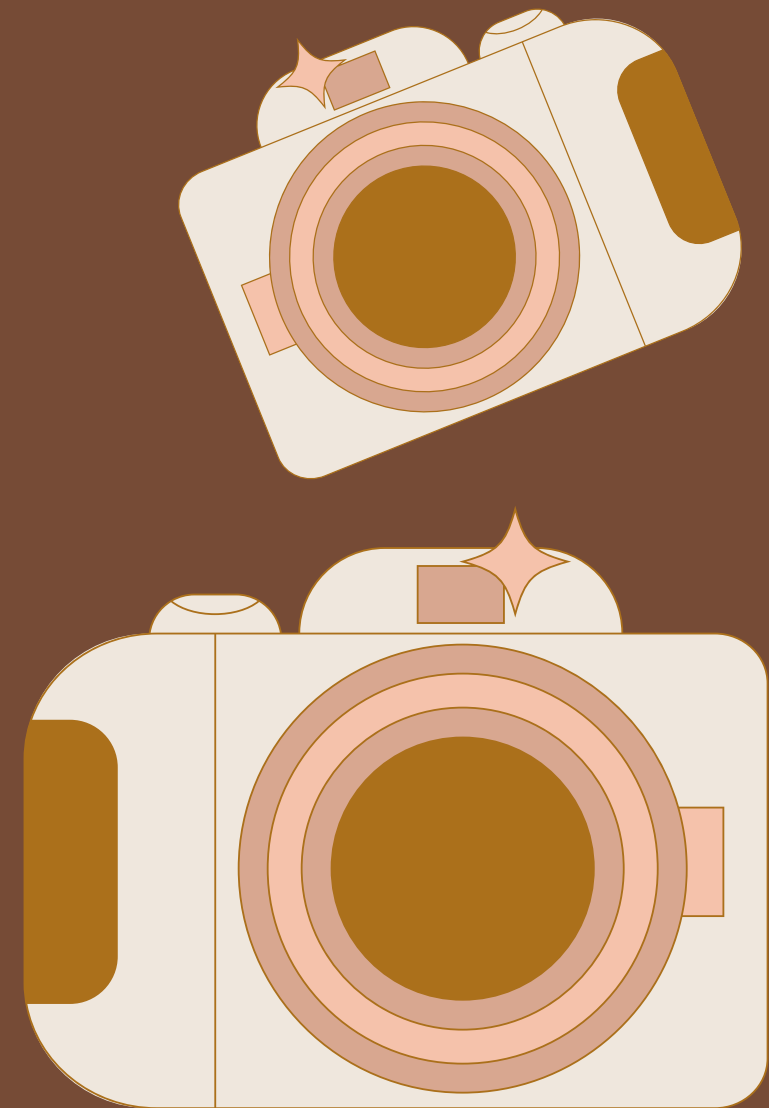

Summary:

An investigation found out that Marie-Louise Gumuchian published over 50 stories with plagiarized work. CNN has removed all of the plagiarized work from her pieces, as much as they could without deleting the whole thing. They added an editor's note discussing the significance of trust, integrity, and giving others credit in the workplace, especially when making the news. Fortunately, CNN was quick to act and got no complaints about the plagiarized work. The plagiarized work was from Reuters, a company she used to work at. This source turned up two or three times which caused a deeper search of all of her work, and other employees soon found out several problems with the entirety of her work.

Consequences involved:

- Her problems were exposed with no hidden identity, causing everyone to know that she was the one who did it.
- Disappointed employees, peers, friends, family, and boss.
- Got fired from the news editor position.
- Will most likely not be hired in a workplace like this ever again.
